Monthly Meeting of West Saanich Women's Institute Tuesday Evening

(Review Correspondent)

KEATING, June 17.—The monthly meeting of the West Saanich Women's Institute was held on Tuesday evening at the Institute Hall, Sluggs Station. Mrs. A. Guy, the president, was in the chair. Following the reading of the correspondence it was decided to assist the South Saanich Farmer's and Women's Institutes in preparing the Saanich exhibit for the Victoria exhibition. Further discussion of the Flower Show to be held at the Experimental Farm in August, took place, and other committees were formed. At the close of the business meeting several friends arrived and a pleasant time was spent in social intercourse interspersed with songs and violin solos. Mrs. R. W. Sluggs sang very sweetly, while a recitation by Mrs. H. A. Blakey was well received. Mr. Kocoon, Mr. Bert Fox, Mr. Sidney Duck, Mrs. R. J. Freeland and Mr. Reginald Duck were others who contributed to the evening's enjoyment. Refreshments followed by a dance brought this very delightful program to a close. Members of the institute are now busy making plans for the Shriner's band concert which it is to be held at the hall on June 27.

The long-hoped for rain has come at last, and while it was delayed too long to make much difference in the strawberry crop, it has wonderfully improved the appearance of the vegetable gardens, grains and later fruits. The cool days have been a boon to the strawberry pickers who usually have to reap the harvest of berries under the rays of a scorching sun, but the wet mornings have resulted in a great deal of time being lost, an item to be considered by those who are away from home. It is hoped that the increase in the general fruit crop will even this up.

Mrs. La Furgey and Miss Hansen have returned to their home on Giles Road to superintend the handling of the fruit crop.

Mrs. T. F. Gold is entertaining her niece, Mrs. Stone, of Bremerton. Mr. F. Gold is also visiting at the parental home, after several months absence.

Mr. and Mrs. Hasenfratz and Mr. and Mrs. W. Lawrie, of Victoria, were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Lawrie on Sunday.

There was a good attendance of members of the Junior Institute, at a meeting held at the home of Miss Blanche Sherring, Thursday night.

The first of the strawberry pickers dances was held at the Temperance Hall on Friday evening, and the event proved so successful that a second dance is to take place under the same management on Friday, June 20. Holt's orchestra will again be in attendance and a midnight supper will be served by a committee of young people.

Mrs. A. McKenzie will read a paper on "Public Health and Child Welfare" at the regular monthly meeting of the South Saanich Women's Institute, on Thursday evening. The roll call will be "Picnic Dishes." On the same evening the Farmers' Institute will convene at the usual hour in the Temperance hall with Mr. E. W. White, district horticulturist, as the speaker of the evening. Another interesting feature of the evening's program will be the presentation of prizes to the successful contestants in the strawberry crop competition. Following the meeting a strawberry social will be held.

The silver tea held at the Anchorage Tea Gardens on Wednesday afternoon under the auspices of the Ladies' Guild of Sannleiton, was a very pleasing affair, as well as a financial success. Afternoon tea was served in the dainty tea rooms by a committee of Guild members. Thanks are extended to Mrs. W. O. Wallace for her kind hospitality.

PING PONG CLUB PICNIC

A delightful afternoon was spent by the Ping Pong Club on Saturday, when it went to Sidney Island for a picnic. The party left Sidney at 4.30 by launch, returning about 9, after a happy time, with supper on the island.

After the wedding breakfast Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Edge left on the evening boat for Seattle and other Coast cities, after spending a few days with Mr. Edge's sister, Mrs. W. Cowell, of Third Street, Sidney. The brides travelling dress was of faun satin crepe with hat to match.

Enthusiastic Conservative Rally Held June 13th. Addressed by Cols. Peck and Foster

(Review Correspondent)

MAYNE ISLAND, June 17.—On June 13, in the Hall, a Conservative Rally was held, attended by a large audience. Col. C. W. Peck and Col. Foster were the speakers. Capt. E. Maude was in the chair. Col. Peck addressed the meeting for an hour, drawing a very plain and straightforward picture of the political situation, touching especially on the financial muddle and extravagant expenditure of the present government, in trips abroad and useless emigration policy. The Colonel's address was received with great applause. Col. Foster then took the floor, and explained that he had left the Provincial Party when they decided that they would not work with any members of the old parties. He spoke of the unsatisfactory state of the roads through poor appropriations, and paid a high compliment to Col. Peck, having known him since a boy, being schoolmates together. The chairman briefly called attention to the state of the roads on the island, the hole in the roof of the public building at Mayne and the fact that the figures quoted by Mr. Jackson, regarding the province had never been presented to parliament. The meeting ended with the National Anthem and three cheers for the Colonels. A splendid supper was then served and dancing continued until a late hour.

Col. and Lady Constance Pawkes and Miss Maude spent some days in Victoria last week. We are very glad to hear from Capt. Waugh that Mrs. Waugh has undergone her operation on her throat and is going on satisfactorily.

FINE FOOTBALL
MATCH AT SIDNEY

Sidney's sporting fraternity was treated to a fine soccer game last Tuesday evening when the Veterans of Victoria played the James Island eleven and the result was a scoreless draw.

The game was arranged by W. McAdam, of Sidney, for the purpose of stimulating football in Sidney. The Veterans fell into line with the scheme and brought a good team out for the game.

The Veterans were surprised to find that the rural district boasted of such a fine eleven. They had to travel hard all through the first half to keep the Islanders from scoring although in the second period they had the ball to themselves for long spells and Bridges, in the Victoria goal, was seldom tested.

M. B. Jackson, K.C. member for The Islands, kicked off the ball and was an interested spectator throughout the match.

Well-Attended Conservative Meeting Held Last Thursday—Speakers Col. Peck and Col. Foster

(Review Correspondent)

PENDER ISLAND, June 17.—A well-attended meeting of electors was held in the Hope Bay hall on Thursday evening of last week, when the Conservative candidate, Col. C. W. Peck and Col. W. W. Foster, former member, gave their side of the story. Mr. Spencer Percival was chairman, and the meeting, like the two previous, was very orderly. A number of questions were asked, and served to make the proceedings a bit more interesting. Col. Peck, in his humorous style, lent animation to an otherwise somewhat desultory evening. During their stay on the island Col. Peck and Col. Foster took the opportunity to do a little canvassing, and were the guests of Mr. S. Percival.

Mr. Walton Bowerman had the misfortune to cut his knee quite badly last week while logging at Browning Harbor, and as a result, has been confined to his home. Accidents of this nature have been fairly numerous of late.

Mr. and Mrs. Washington Grimmer came home on Friday, after having spent a very pleasant three-week's holiday with relatives and friends.

WOMEN'S LIBERAL-
CONSERVATIVE CLUB

Under the auspices of the Women's Liberal-Conservative Club of Sidney, a public meeting, followed by a musical program and dance, was held in the Berquist Hall, Tuesday evening, 17th inst., a large number being present. Mrs. T. R. Davis, president, was in the chair and was supported by Mrs. A. Harvey and Mrs. Tom Stewart.

The speakers, Miss Bowron, Mr. H. D. Twigg, Mr. H. Carmichael and Col. C. W. Peck received great ovation, and strong enthusiasm prevailed throughout the meeting. Col. Peck thoroughly convinced his hearers that the Provincial Party, after making such a hue and cry about "purity of politics" and condemnation of Mr. Bowser, did themselves, approach one of British Columbia's most prominent men for contribution to their own lost cause.

Mrs. Wright, Miss Wright, Mrs. McAdams, Miss A. Crossley and Mr. Crichton delighted everyone present with their singing. An excellent orchestra was provided by Mrs. Whiting, Mr. I. Wilson and Mr. Raymond Brethour, and the dance was much enjoyed.

A very pretty touch to the evening's proceedings was when Miss Dorothy Prince presented the lady speaker, Miss Bowron, with a beautiful bouquet of roses tied with "Conservative Blue" ribbon; and Dorothy, herself, looked extremely sweet in a white dress with a sash of "Conservative Blue" satin.

Refreshments were served by the ladies, and the tables were prettily decorated with flowers.

Meeting of Provincial Party on Friday, June 13, in Fulford Hall

(Review Correspondent)

FULFORD HARBOR, June 16.—The Provincial Party held a public meeting on Friday, June 13, (of all days), at the Fulford Hall. The attendance was comparatively small, a number of whom were Conservatives and many more too juvenile to vote. This meeting began somewhat discreditably, abuse being levelled from the platform at a gentleman highly respected in this district, who is alleged to have made certain damaging statements against whom abusive terms were used in his absence. He, however, appeared in the hall, challenged his traducers and flatly denied the imputations, the event ended by Dr. McIntosh apologizing and requesting him to shake hands. During the evening addresses were given pointing out the terrible crimes of the other parties typical of those we read in the "Searchlight," and of course pointing out what excellent members they would make if returned to power.

Mr. T. M. Jackson is confined to his bed for a few days, the result of an accident. He fell over a log, badly straining his side, and probably has a broken rib as well.

Miss Mary Walter has been spending a few days at "Dromore," the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton.

Mr. and Mrs. Pollok's lawn tennis tournament was finished on Sunday, June 8, the winners being: Ladies' doubles—Mrs. Speed and Mrs. Corbett; men's doubles—Messrs. Dermot and Desmond Crofton; mixed—Mrs. Pollok and Capt. Pender. The prizes were presented by Mrs. Peck.

The Conservative meeting held at the Fulford Hall on June 10 was well attended. Col. C. W. Peck spoke most eloquently to an enthusiastic audience, the applause which he received was sufficient to show the esteem in which he is held among his friends here. It is most interesting to note that it was through Col. Peck that the reduction in the number of Japanese fishing licences has been secured from year to year, it is also important to note from his statements that the return of the Conservatives will mean abolition of the caucus, which binds the members to blindly follow their leader. The present candidates are not pledged to any other course of action than that which they regard as best for their constituencies and the province, and any measure tending to this they will support, no matter by whom or what party it is introduced. Dr. Tolmie, who was loudly acclaimed by his friends old and new, gave a long and interesting address, touching on matters both Dominion and Provincial, clearly illustrating the futility of third parties and pointing to the farmers how the Conservative Party intends to help them.

Dr. and Mrs. Tolmie paid a short visit to Fulford Harbor last week, where they were welcomed by a host of friends, a number of them of many years standing. In the afternoon of June 10, Mrs. Tolmie gave a tea at the White House to a number of her own friends, also those of her husband.

On June 7, a Liberal meeting was held at the Fulford Hall at 3.30 p.m. The speakers were Mr. M. B. Jackson and the Hon. John Oliver, who spoke for two hours to a fairly large audience of all parties. Mr. A. Ruckle was in the chair.

CONSERVATIVES HOLD BIG MEETING

The largest political gathering ever seen in Sidney was that held by the Liberal-Conservatives on Saturday night in the Auditorium, when Col. Cy. Peck, V.C., and Col. W. W. Foster spoke to a crowded hall. Col. Foster was present to answer charges made against him by members of the Provincial party, many of whom were present and who fired questions at the close of his speech in a long string.

Col. Foster, who was introduced by the chairman, Dr. Manning, spoke at length on the need of a new Government. There were good sincere men in all parties, he said, who only desired to work for the good of their country. He, himself, if elected, would only follow his party as long as that party did the right thing for the country.

Col. Foster referred to letters he had received from the Provincial party, which were not creditable. He thought a bad state of affairs was indicated when public men were so abused after having given years of service, as Mr. Bowser and others had done. Col. Foster had no criticism to make of the Provincial party, except on the one plank of its platform which said that it would not combine with any other party.

The expenditure of the present Government was severely criticized. Col. Foster saying that any board of directors of a company who trebled the debt of the company would be replaced, and he quoted from speeches made by Mr. Oliver, Mr. Pattullo and Mrs. Ralph Smith, all of them to the effect that taxes could not be reduced.

At the close of Col. Foster's splendid address, Dr. Macintosh, third party candidate, and Major Buck and Mr. Gibson, third party supporters, asked the colonel a long string of questions, none of which had any bearing on the questions of the day, but were relative to private conversations which had taken place in Vancouver. His opinion of Mr. Bowser was also the subject of interrogation.

Col. Foster said he would take the judge's decision about Mr. Bowser as final. He read passages from The Searchlight to show why he had not stayed with the Provincial party. He had never legally joined them, he said, never having signed a pledge card, but morally he had been in sympathy with the movement at its commencement.

When Col. Foster left the hall to catch the boat to Vancouver, the applause was deafening, and three hearty cheers and a tiger were given him.

Col. Peck, who received a tremendous ovation when he arose to speak, said the Provincial party had a lot to say of campaign funds, but it knew quite well that in every election there had always been funds, and notwithstanding the fact that it had placards up all over the country about funds that the Provincial party itself had gone to General J. M. Stewart and had asked for money for campaign purposes.

Dr. Macintosh immediately called for proof of this statement.

Col. Peck replied that Gen. Stewart had told him so himself about two months ago in Vancouver. That was the last disturbance in the meeting, and when Col. Peck concluded his speech he received terrific applause and cheers, which almost shook the building.

A large number of Col. Peck's followers were on the platform, Mrs. Davis, president, Mrs. A. Harvey, vice-president, and Mrs. T. Stewart, secretary of the Women's Liberal-Conservative club, being among the number.

"Liver Trouble so Severe I Had to Quit Work"

Mr. Thomas Honey, Brantford, Ont., writes:

"I was a great sufferer from enlargement of the liver for ten months, and finally I had to quit work. I would wake up in the mornings with a bitter taste in my mouth, had frequent headaches, yellow complexion, and pain in my right side, and between the shoulder blades. It was almost unbearable, and terribly weakening. I could not sleep at night and my heart also bothered me. But the whole trouble has now left me, thanks to that wonderful medicine, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills."

OUR NEW SERIAL STORY

"I guess I don't want any ranches at all unless my right to 'em is sartin' clear," said Tomlinson, with a nasal twang of his vocal chords. "I guess one of these all busted ranches is your own, right here where I've set my feet, and you're going to clear out nimble like, so's you shouldn't be thanked for persuadin' some blind parateetic pal to go dead and leave his ranch to the first man what looks up over the horizon and spots it."

"Wal, I'm not sayin' yew haven't hit it, pard. I allow there's a pal o' mine goin' to die jest before I make tracks. Yew see, it's this way. It's a darned pity for tew ranches to go to thunder when there's a man of your shape and size who's willing to pay me for mine and have the other one thrown in. Before I introduce you to my pal wot's going to die so's to leave you his ranch, I want to know wherether you stand in."

Tomlinson hesitated. At last he said, "As I'm the darned idiot that's going to settle on these two hellsome ranches to please you, and as you're the gaudy spark wot's clarin' west to hieve your sorrier in the busy bants of men, I gess the actual cause of your pal's death ain't no funeral o' mine. I'll sweep up after you, and tell people as how your pal and you have loped off west to buy cattle, or some such cockheifer and bullfinch yarn, but I'm darned well transfigured if I'm going to crowd another notch on a busted conscience that won't hold it."

Jersey Craggs again filled his visitor's glass. "Sot your mind easy on that point, pardner," he said. "The notch will be on a good old seasoned conscience, you bet your guns, and that conscience won't be yourn. All you've got to do is to quist things a bit when I've gone, and as to all the rest, leave it to me. Your left hand needn't know what my right hand's playing at. But when you wake up one morning and find that these two ranches belong to you, jest tidy things up, and do the best by the cattle that you can. I'll tote my carcass round here again for the price of my ranch some time or other. Now, drink down, and say if you'll take it on."

Tomlinson drank down, then put out his hand, and said—

"Shake!"

"Now that's fixed we'll go along and swear you in as fencer pro tem."

So Tomlinson became Joe Brereton's man, and proved himself a most punctilious servitor.

CHAPTER IV.

During the first three weeks of Joe Brereton's acquaintance with Jersey Craggs, they were continually together in the evenings and the latter would frequently refer casually to incidents in the former's life history. "That reminds me of what you were telling me about," he would say, referring to some particular point. "What was it again?" At which Brereton would relate some incident a second time, and the Yankee would smile to think how fully he had led up to a point of which he was not quite certain. It was astonishing, too, in that a plausible way Craggs could make amusing conversation out of details which were apparently of the most trivial moment.

Brereton was a good talker, and when a man has lived alone for a long time, it seems imperative that he should get himself off his mind to the first good listener before proceeding to less personal matters. If over there was a good listener Craggs was one. Now he crossed one leg over the other, thrust the points of his fingers into his perpendicular trouser pockets, and leaned back in his chair with his cigar hand free, to lend emphasis to his remarks and scatter cigar-ash over the floor. He had all the points of a good listener, and he induced such a current of eloquence in Brereton, that the latter, apologizing occasionally for talking so much about himself, rambled on and on, just as an unsuspecting individual might to a dark writer of stories.

One night it happened that the talk flagged a little. Craggs was at Brereton's ranch. It was late, and Joe's history seemed to have petered out with the whiskey. Craggs looked at the clock, rose from his seat, stretched himself, and guessed he must be going.

"Turn in here tonight," said Brereton; "Tomlinson will make you up a bed."

Craggs stopped his stretching, and remained fixed in a grotesque and ungainly attitude, which, if it had only been real catalepsy, would have out-Heroded Herod. Suddenly his arms dropped by his side, and he said—

"Since it's yew that asks me, Brereton, old hoss, I will, and that'll give us time for a game of euchre before turning in."

Brereton asked his new man Tomlinson to prepare a bed, and they sat down to cards. Craggs won the first game, and stroked his goatee in satisfaction.

"Another," said Brereton. "My deal."

"Ha! Joey, my boy," laughed Craggs, "it takes a good man to beat me at euchre when it's a game of skill."

"We'll see," replied Brereton; "a small element of chance often upsets the most consummate skill."

The issue of the game justified the remark, for Brereton won easily.

"Another," said Craggs.

"Ha! my friend," laughed Brereton, "it takes a good man to beat me when euchre's a game of chance."

"We'll see," replied Craggs. "This will be the conqueror. If I win you may consider it proved right here that euchre's a game of skill. If you win it's a low down game of chance."

The play proceeded.

"I'm all but," said Craggs, at length, turning down his counters, "and you're only five. I shall win. Inere! see that?"

The dealer had just turned up the ace of spades.

"Pass," said Joe.

"I'll take it up," said Craggs. "Play to that!" he added, throwing down the right bower.

Brereton put his seven of spades upon it.

"One," said Craggs, leading again with his ace of trumps.

"One," said Brereton, taking it with his left bower, and then leading the king of spades.

Craggs put an eight of spades on it.

"Two to me," said Brereton, and led again with the nine of spades.

"Two to me!" cried Craggs, banging down the queen with enough violence to break her neck. "Now we shall see!" With less violence he placed the seven of diamonds on the table.

"Euchre!" said Joe, gently placing the eight of diamonds upon it.

"Rumbo! euchre's a game of chance," said Craggs, "barring the fact that if I had begun with the seven of diamonds I should have won." Then he added, to himself, "But life and death are matters of skill with this child, bar nothing."

"Strange," said Brereton, "how a small element of chance upsets the cleverest calculations."

And so it proved in the game of life and death to which Jersey Craggs had referred.

CHAPTER V.

Brereton conducted his guest to his room and bade him good night, but some minutes later Craggs entered the room where his host was undressing, and said—

"Say, boss, I'd like to have a look at my horse before I turn in; he sorter feels slighted like if I don't go and smooth him down a bit last thing."

"Right you are!" said Brereton. "You know the way all right."

"Rumbo! I guess I do."

Craggs closed the door, and, passing downstairs and out of the house, was soon engaged in saddling his horse with great care, in preparation for a hasty flight when his foul night's work was done.

Meantime, Brereton, who was about to get into bed, paused irresolutely, ran his fingers once or twice through his hair, and then, going to the door, called to his man—

"Tomlinson, are you in bed?"

"Hello! No, I ain't," came faintly from a small room right at the back of the house.

"Come here a minute, then; I want you."

Tomlinson presently appeared on the scene, all garments except for what was still kept up by one suspender.

"What is it, boss?" he asked.

"Well, it's like this, Tomlinson," said Brereton, confidentially, "Mr. Craggs snores like thunder, and the last time I spent the night at his house I hardly slept a wink because my room was next to his. Does that sort of thing keep you awake?"

"Wal, no, I can't say as it does," replied Tomlinson, with a grin. "I snore like a quartz crusher meself, and it don't never keep me awake."

"Then perhaps you wouldn't mind bringing your bedclothes and turning in here, while I have your room?"

"All right, boss; I'm thar." And Tomlinson hurried away to execute the mission.

Brereton gathered up his bedclothes, and met his man halfway along the passage bringing his own.

"Don't let Mr. Craggs know," he said, as he paused a moment; "it might hurt his feelings."

In some ten minutes' time Tomlinson was asleep and snoring in his master's room and Brereton dreaming undisturbed in the room at the back of the house. When Craggs returned from the stable, he paused by the half-open door through which one loud snoring of Tomlinson could be heard, and muttered to himself—

"Sleep sound, Joey, my boy; you'll sleep sounder presently."

He entered the adjoining room and lighted his candle. The flame showed his lean, cadaverous face set with his villainous purpose as he produced a long keen knife from a sheath in one of his top-boots. He had been sharpening it in the stable, and now, as he felt its point, he seemed satisfied with it.

He listened. The night was very still. Through his open window he heard the sound made by his horse champing his bit in the stable as if in a hurry to be away, and from afar in the night came the barking of a dog. Standing in the doorway of his room he listened again. A clock on the mantelpiece downstairs struck one. He stole along the short stretch of passage that led to the adjoining bedroom, and softly opened the door. The snoring still continued. But he must guard against any outcry, for he did not want Tomlinson's help. He always did these things better alone. Retracing his steps, he secured a pillow, and presently returning with that pillow in one hand and his knife in the other, he made his way towards the dimly outlined form stretched on the bed in the corner.

If the picture of Jersey Craggs could have been struck then as he stood ready to spring upon his victim to strike a blow and stifle a death-cry, it would have shown him as a demon of the first fire. Some day scientists will show us pictures of things that no human eye could have observed—pictures derived from the bosom of the air itself, or from walls that may have not only ears, but sensitized surfaces. Then dark deeds will be as few and far between as the future villains of the Jersey Craggs stamp, for they must be committed to all intents and purposes under the eye of man; but the villain in question here was, as he would have put it, "merely under the eye of the Almighty," and for that he cared little, if at all. It was dark—quite dark enough for us to say that we did not see that foul crime; we only heard a stifled, mothered cry, and a short struggle, and silence fell again upon the house—a silence emphasized by the regular beat of a death-tick in the wall—or was it the drip of blood upon the floor?—by the cry of an owl in the neighboring plantation, and the weird barking of that dog in the distant night.

Without removing the pillow from the face of the murdered man, Craggs made his way to the peg on which he had seen Brereton hang his coat and waistcoat. All Brereton's papers which would be useful for his purpose he transferred to his own pocket. His watch and knife and belt also he annexed.

"No need to worry Tomlinson about it now," he said, hesitating a moment in the passage. "He'll find it out all right in the morning, and put everything square. I guess I'll leave a little note for him though."

Taking a pencil and an old envelope, which he found among Brereton's papers, he placed it against the wall in the dark, and scribbled as best he was able: "Tomlinson, my hairpin, please receive two ranches. Don't be a clam—use Sunlight Soap."

"There!" he said, with a chuckle. "That'll remind him that there's a little cleanin' job to be done in the mornin'."

He placed the envelope carefully on the floor, then found his way downstairs and out of the house. In less than three minutes he was riding swiftly away into the night.

"Now for Denver!" he said, leaning forward over his galloping horse. "One Joe Brereton's disposed of, and I guess I'll drive a tall bargain with the other. Ha! ha! Frank, you limb! You need old Jersey Craggs to help you sot your foot on the road to fortune. Tumble up, old hoss, you're good for thirty miles."

CHAPTER VI.

It was about five next morning when the real and only Joe Brereton awoke in Tomlinson's bed. In order to dress he had to go back to his own room, as he had left his clothes there. Coming to Craggs's door on his way, he knocked, and called out the time. Receiving no answer, he entered, and was surprised to find that the bed had not been slept in.

Returning to the passage, he was about to enter his own room when his quick eye described an envelope on the floor. He picked it up mechanically, and noticed it contained something written in pencil the words and the lines all running into each other. He went to a little window at the end of the passage, and spelled it out by the morning light: "Tomlinson, my hairpin, please receive two ranches. Don't be a clam—use Sunlight soap."

Joe looked puzzled. The envelope was one that had come out of his own pocket, for it bore his own name and address in ink, while the pencil scrawl was that of Craggs.

"Looks as if it had been written in the dark," said Joe to himself.

Thinking that perhaps Craggs, when he had gone out to see to his horse, had changed his mind about staying the night, which would account for his bed being undisturbed, he went into his own room to rouse Tomlinson.

"Half-past five, Tomlinson; roll out!"

But the form on the bed did not stir, and Joe, who had advanced into the room, stopped short, and started back, for the haft of a knife was showing outside the blanket, and upon the floor was a pool of blood. Joe rushed to the bed, and snatched the pillow away. The sightless eyes of Tomlinson stared up at him.

The sharp exclamation of horror with which he greeted this shocking discovery arose not so much from mere physical disgust as from the fact that his mind in a flash struck the thought that Craggs must have done this foul thing in the same way as he had scribbled the words on the letter, viz. in the dark, in which case he could not have known that it was Tomlinson in the bed.

The obvious conclusion was, then, that Craggs had started in to murder him, Brereton, and had killed the wrong man. Had he discovered his mistake?

A sudden thought on this point prompted Joe to run to the window with the envelope which he had been crushing in his clenched hand, smoothing it out, he searched it back and front, and at last said—

"It ain't thought so."

The cause of his remark was a faint smudge of blood on the corner of the paper, from which simple fact he gleaned that Craggs must have written on the envelope after perpetrating his crime. This, as the message was to Tomlinson, was proof enough that Craggs was under the impression that the man he had just killed in Brereton's bed was no other than Brereton himself.

"What a cold-blooded villain!" said Joe. "What could have been his motive?"

The scribbled passage seemed to imply that there was some understanding between Craggs and Tomlinson, that understanding being that he was to receive two ranches—Craggs's and Joe's, apparently—and to use Sunlight soap, presumably to wash away all traces of the dastardly crime.

So much for Craggs's good intentions towards Tomlinson, but when Joe cast a look at the bed with its murdered occupant, he reflected grimly that Tomlinson did not look very much like receiving two ranches. But why this sudden generosity towards Tomlinson? Craggs was not a man to give away ranches unless he had some ulterior object which justified the gift. Joe asked himself the question, What was this ulterior motive? And while he searched for it, he dressed himself. Once he thought he found it in his empty pockets; but no, Craggs would not leave two ranches in pawn for a gold watch and chain and a sum of twenty dollars.

Joe stopped the process of buttoning up his waistcoat—he had never abandoned the English trick of wearing a waistcoat—to ask himself another question. Why had Craggs taken all his letters and papers, his old pocket-knife, his belt with his initials stamped on it, his cigarette-holder, and his sheath-knife? Notwithstanding these difficulties, Brereton was able to settle two points clearly in his mind: first, that Craggs was perfectly sane, and must have had some deep-laid motive for his crime; and, secondly, that he had left without making the discovery that it was Tomlinson, and not he, Brereton, that he had done to death. Yet as to why he had taken the comparatively valueless articles from his coat and waistcoat, and left a handful of cash in his breeches pocket, remained a mystery.

We need not tell of the inquest, of the verdict of wilful murder against Craggs, or of the vain search for that missing man. Nor need we remind the reader that, had he been in Brereton's place, he would scarcely have seen Craggs's motive as clearly as he now gleams it from the selected circumstances of the three weeks' acquaintanceship of these two men.

CHAPTER VII.

It was a warm evening in Denver some days after the events narrated in the preceding chapter, when a somewhat cadaverous Yankee was seen to ride into the town on a jaded mule. The reason why this man had let himself out of the train on a fairly steep up-grade, some fifteen miles back, might possibly be unraveled at sight when the name of the lean Yankee is written down as Jersey Craggs, late of Texas, formerly of Cincinnati. With a caress and a pull at his scraggly goatee, he had opined that maybe the station would be a dangerous place for him, and therefore he had fired himself from the train on the up-grade, and posing as a man from nowhere in general, had bought a mule to carry him to Denver.

His first business on arriving was to ride straight to the house of one Somers, who kept a store in the main street. Somers was not at the store, nor was he at his house near by, but a man came along who said he had

EXODUS OF SKILLED LABOR HURTFUL

When Canadian industry resumes normal activity, it is feared that a shortage of skilled and semi-skilled labor will be experienced, as a result of the exodus of this class of labor to the United States, during the past year. Immigration has compensated only in a small way for this loss and industrial leaders are now being urged to push ahead the training of apprentices.

Technical schools promise to help out materially in this situation. In large centres like Toronto boys and young men are showing a much greater inclination to take up trades. Mr. Kennedy, director of technical education in Toronto, finds that 19 out of 20 boys are today divided 50-50 between commercial life and trades. The latter are taking more seriously to their task, while the night classes of youths and young men are now jammed. In the machine shop it has been necessary to double the classes, the same with automobile and the building trades.

In the matter of employment there has been a steady demand for graduates in the various trades, but there are indications, that from now on until industry improves, there will be a surplus of these graduates. There has been some criticism of employers for not taking on new apprentices and criticism of youths for not taking up trades. The stand of both is somewhat justified. Builders might be cited as an example. They have not been in a position to ensure an apprentice steady work. On the other hand, the development of new machinery, in wood-working and machine trades for example, has been such as to discourage apprentices taking up such trades.

The industrial relations committee of the C. M. A. has made the recommendation that groups of employers should take up the question of apprentices to the end that they will not suffer from a shortage of labor when normal times resume.

B. C. ONLY PROVINCE TO ADOPT 48-HOUR WEEK LAW

British Columbia is the only province to adopt the most important of the International labor draft conventions passed in Washington back in 1919. At the last session of the legislature it passed a 48-hour week law to come into force on 1st January, 1925. Agriculture, horticulture and dairying are excepted, and the provisions of the Act are only to be put into operation in respect to any particular industry, after a Board of Adjustment representing the Government, labor and employers shall have heard representations from interested parties.

LUMBERING PROVIDES THE RAILROADS WITH HALF OF FREIGHT TRAFFIC

81,000 Cars Needed to Handle British Columbia's Rail Shipments of Wood Products

Imagine the effect on our rail transportation system if half their outward freight traffic were withdrawn.

Figures issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics show that one-half of the rail freight traffic originating in British Columbia is made up of forest products.

Last year the railways carried well over 2,000,000 tons of lumber, shingles and other wood products out of British Columbia.

At a low estimate the amount paid in freight exceeded $25,000,000.

81,000 Cars

It took 81,000 cars to handle the lumber shipped to our rail markets last year. These cars would make up a train 600 miles long that would reach from Vancouver to Banff, Alta.

The above figures do not include the millions of feet of logs moved on public railways from camps to mills.

The railways benefit enormously by the heavy freights paid on camp and mill machinery, equipment and supplies, entering the Province.

The forest products group buys more material and employs more persons than the three or four next biggest industries put together. Both coming and going, it is logging and lumbering that keeps the railway racks from rusting.

This series of articles communicated by the Timber Industries Council of British Columbia.

The Doubling of Joseph Brereton

"Do you calculate he's thar now?" said Craggs.

"Waal, I guess so," was the reply. "I couldn't tote him out of it, so I sot him up agen the tree and left him."

"Is there any water in that well?" "Any a gad's quantity, but the pump's gone crunk."

"Rope there?"

"Nope."

"Bucket?"

"Nope."

"Rumho! I guess you mean the old well by the gum in Barker's Slope."

The man assured him that Somers ought to be at that very spot unless the devil had left a check for him; and Craggs, having offered him his plug, set off down the street towards the nearest tinker's shop, where he purchased a bucket for a quarter, and borrowed a coil of rope. With these he strode off over the fields and up Barker's Slope, until he neared the solitary tree that shaded the old pump and the well from the rays of the half-grown moon.

On drawing near, he saw a figure sitting propped up against the tree-trunk. Craggs never let a virtuous sense of indignation get the better of him. He took the situation as he found it, with neither a frown nor a wink. Setting down the bucket and the rope, he went up to the recumbent figure, and by the rays of the moon sifted through the gum leaves by the night breeze, recognized the features as those of the "late Joe Brereton," as he put it to himself.

Having ascertained that the man before him was practically Frank Somers, differing only from the normal in so far as Philip drunk might differ from Philip sober, he made no attempt to rouse him by moral suasion, but simply tied the rope to the handle of the bucket, and let it down the trap of the well. When he had drawn the bucket up full, he carried it to the foot of the tree, and, poisoning himself in the attitude of a man about to extinguish a fire, dashed the whole contents over the luckless Somers. It was not until he had done this twice very thoroughly that he took much notice of the effect produced.

When with the third bucketful in his hand he saw that the patient was showing some spluttering signs of animation, he remarked—

"It's all right, Franky, old pal. It's only me—Craggs. Ef you'll jest set still a bit, I'll give you another."

With this he let him have it full in the face again.

NO ULTERIOR MOTIVE

Vesuvius Bay,
Sait Spring Island, B.C.,
June 14, 1924.

The Editor,
Sidney and Islands Review.

Dear Sir:

I should appreciate your courtesy in publishing the following few remarks which may be of interest to those who are supporting our Conservative candidate in this constituency.

Some people have remarked to me that military achievement, even the attaining of the proudest distinction the world can offer to a soldier, does not imply that the recipient is on that account qualified to manage the affairs of a constituency.

As an original member of the 16th Battalion, the Canadian Scottish, may I be allowed to remind these people that, this Battalion was universally acknowledged to be one of the finest, if not the finest Battalion in the C. E. F.

There is a well-known saying in the army, that a battalion is the mirror which reflects the character of its commanding officer.

A battalion during the war would pass through its ranks anywhere from 4 to 5,000 men, and its personnel would be constantly changing.

Through all these changes we of the 16th were always, and at all times, one of the happiest, most contented units in the C. E. F.

Why?—because we were commanded by a man who was held, by every man who served under him, in the highest possible esteem and affection; not only for his personal courage, but for the thousands and one small details, by constant attention to which he, was able to obtain for us all the privileges and comforts available.

For the benefit of those who will doubtless be kind enough to suggest that this letter is written with some ulterior motive, I attach my full address.

Yours truly,
L. CHAPLIN, (No. 29087)

IN APPRECIATION

Deep Cove,
June 16, 1924

Editor,
Sidney and Islands Review.

Sir:

I take this opportunity of thanking you most sincerely for the courtesy shown me the past few months in allowing space in your correspondence columns for my various letters.

May I express the wish that as much interest may be taken in the future, in the public questions of the day as they may arise and that in the discussion of same we may be actuated by the same honesty of purpose as has I believe characterized our discussions on the political issues of the day.

Very truly yours,
CHAS. E. WHITE.

WAKE UP ELECTORATE!

To the Editor:

The first duty which loyalty to British Columbia imposes on us, is for each one to make himself or herself a good citizen. Our next obligation is to place the welfare of the province above party. The public good must take precedence over the individual welfare if a high standard of citizenship is to be maintained.

A political party should be simply an instrument to help make a better government. It must not exist for itself. Its end is the service of the people. It endures for the whole people and all their interests.

Everyone should have realized by now that with the present political parties in the province the zeal of victory has meant only the "spoils of victory." The extent to which the confidence of the people in the possibility of honest government has been undermined in British Columbia is truly alarming. On every side we hear expressions to the effect that there is no hope of improving the present situation. Such a despair of responsible and representative government cannot long continue without a very detrimental effect on our citizenship as a whole. It is a condition which exists in Mexico, that land of revolutions, but in a British commonwealth like this province such sentiment should be foreign to our institution. We must remove the cause, if for no other reason than to protect the loyalty of our people.

The time is here when we must return to some semblance of honesty and efficiency in our provincial government if we are to regain our own confidence and self respect. Unless we do this the consequence of the present trend of public opinion will be on our heads. The need for a political uplift in British Columbia is recognized throughout the Dominion, as may be seen when we read the scathing comments on the political situation in the province as published in the daily and periodical press elsewhere in Canada.

British Columbia is suffering from an extreme case of machine politics with the patronage evil carried to its fullest development. The spoils system has resulted in a standard of public morality which looks upon the reward for party service at the expense of the province as quite justifiable. This is resulting in the useless expenditure of large sums of public money with a consequent ever increasing burden of taxation.

Once he or she fully realizes the situation, it is a poor type of citizen who will not respond to the call to fight organized privilege in this province. After many years of financial debauch the people of course have much reason for losing faith in the ability of either of the old parties to return the province to the high road of decency and help it moving along that way.

The Provincial Party is but a union of citizens without regard to party, for the purpose of securing an honest and efficient government in British Columbia. Only such concerted action will produce the concrete results we all desire.

The Conservative leader, referring to the Provincial Party has said, "Don't take any chance on these business men. None of them have ever been in public life. They may have succeeded in the hard competition of the business world, but they know nothing of professional politics. The province will be ruined if they are returned to office." What food for babes! What nonsense!

Could the Provincial Party have a better endorsement? How much longer must business experience and integrity continue a bar to public life in British Columbia? Will the electors heed the cry of the terrified paid army of job holders, "Don't take both our lords away"? How many people believe that chaos is to follow the replacement of our late improvident and incompetent legislation with a business legislature composed of good, honest, patriotic citizens?

The Premier wants to get back into power, on—(1), the strength of his record and, (2), his fight for the reduction of freight rates. This rate question is not new. It was originated by Dunsmuir and revived by Prior and McBride. Was Mr. Oliver at that time an active supporter of freight rates reduction, or is it the proverbial straw clutched at by a drowning man?

At a Conservative Convention, held in Vancouver, when the present leader of that party had to fight hard to return his leadership, Mr. Bowser was given a free hand to erect a platform at his own convenience. What has he done? Supinely let his own party down through having no constructive policy for the good of the province. As a result we got an apology for a platform constructed of innumerable parochial shivers cut to fit local needs. Is he fit to be the Premier of British Columbia?

What government do you expect of these two old parties neither of which has a sound, constructive policy?

The Provincial Party, through the medium of over three hundred delegates from all parts of the province, in convention assembled, has laid down a platform containing fifty resolutions every one of which shows a constructive policy tending towards the betterment of the common weal. Forty-six candidates have been nominated, men and women drawn from the business, professional, agricultural and laboring world, each one of whom has sworn to uplift these policies.

The Provincial Party has given the truth where the same has been possible to get at. It has not fought with the weapons of lies, slander and that most cowardly instrument of all, innuendo.

Personal abuse which has been indulged in and no doubt will be indulged in up till the day of election by the Liberal and Conservatives, so called, is necessary to their plan of action which is to hide the real points at issue. They would rather join forces than see the Provincial Party take the reins of government and expose the fearful mess their "caucus" misrule has brought the country.

Wake up electorate! You woke up on the question of "reciprocity." You woke up when the empire and Christianity were in peril. Wake up! Throw off the slothful indifference you have displayed toward the conditions under which you are trying to exist. Forget your political laris and penatis, they have but feet of clay, and help throw out these unpatriotic politicians who are openly and shamelessly bribing your votes. You nearly became German slaves as you going to remain politically shackled and at the beck and call of immoral caucuses. Does "In Flanders Fields" contain no message for British Columbia?

RICHARD H. W. CLOWES.

RAMBLINGS

By the "Rambler"

"We judge ourselves by what we feel capable of doing, while others judge us by what we have already done."—Longfellow.

At the Bond Dealers' Association convention held in Toronto this week, it was stated that reports dealing with the public debts issued by Manitoba, Ontario and New Brunswick were practically worthless. The reports from British Columbia were highly commended.

Greece is celebrating the centenary of Byron in the issue of a series of stamps, one represents the landing of Byron at Missolonghi, and another bears the portrait of the poet in his youth.

A correspondent in the Victoria morning paper has been searching the Bible for the result of the election; unfortunately for his prediction it is based on false premises. Farmers and business men know that their axes have been reduced.

The local correspondent of the morning paper, describes the Postal meeting on Saturday as the biggest ever held in Sidney. Imagination is vivid, memory is short.

A revised version of the old lines was heard by Rambler after the Foster meeting. "He who fights and runs away lives to fight another day." "He who talks and runs away will not talk another day."

In a debate in the Senate at Ottawa, Senator the Hon. Mr. Webster, spoke against the British preference, which he described as a "one-sided preference." The open market Britain offers to Canadian goods is not good enough for some of these Senators.

RUDE RURAL RHYMES

WEEDS

I love the man that in the spring goes out to dig the dirt, by jing. I love to see him bend his back, I love to hear his knee joints crack. I love to see him shed his jacket, tear off the corner from the packet, and sow good seeds with hopeful grin, to grow beet greens and vitamins. But he who starts a goodly garden, some handy spot his field or yard in, and then goes off and lets the weeds grow up and make a million seeds, which shortly far and wide are blown and on his neighbor's garden sown, as well as thickly in his own—he ought to have what Uncle Nick was wont to call a good swift kick. I'd like to hold him from his chair and boot him round from here to there. The sun rides high to singe and scald, I feel it more because I'm bald. My garden rows are long and mazy; I hate to work because I'm lazy, the sweet flies darn near drive me crazy; but you I labor soon and late, I let no ragweeds propagate. O brother, for the love of Pete, get out and work your hands and feet. O comrade for the love of Jake, go sowing the hoe and yank the rake. Come neighbor, for the love of tripe, don't let those Johnson seeds get ripe.

The ordinary way to measure distance is by miles. You think any place you have in mind is so many miles away. It seems a long way off. Look at it another way. Measure the distance by minutes. Say to yourself, "Such or such a place is so many minutes away," meaning, of course, that if the telephone is used distance does not need to be considered.

If you want to talk to a friend or discuss a business matter, no place is very far away. Not only that, but the means of communication is always right at hand. Every telephone is a long distance telephone. Besides, if you talk in the evening, you can take advantage of the special rates.
